Environment enhancement to promote psychological well-being.

The current environmental enhancement program addresses only one required element (enrichment items). A multifaceted enhancement plan beyond provision of enrichment items (e.g. food, toys, puzzles, furniture) is instrumental for addressing social and special consideration needs, providing a means to express species-typical behavior, and promoting overall psychological well-being in nonhuman primates. The environmental enhancement plan as directed by the attending veterinarian must be modified to also include consideration to social grouping and special considerations when housing infant or young nonhuman primates; nonhuman primates showing signs of psychological distress through behavior or appearance; nonhuman primates requiring restricted activity; individually housed nonhuman primates unable to see and hear others of their own or compatible species; and great apes weighing over 110lbs.

Correct by February 15, 2024.
