Environment enhancement to promote psychological well-being.

The facility's environment enhancement plan does not include special considerations for infant and juvenile nonhuman primates. The facility is currently hand raising a juvenile nonhuman primate, however, there are no special considerations documented for the animal in their plan. During the inspection, the animal appeared healthy and the facility stated that they are providing numerous enrichment opportunities.

Certain nonhuman primates at various life stages or in certain circumstances require special attention regarding environmental enhancement to ensure the psychological well-being of the animals. It's important to document these special considerations in the environment enhancement plan to ensure that the animals needing additional attention are receiving special care which is consistent with the attending veterinarian's instructions.

Exhibitors, as directed by the attending veterinarian, must develop, document, and follow an appropriate plan for environment enhancement which includes special considerations for infant and young juveniles.
