3.56(a)(1)

SANITATION.

Some of the rabbit hutches have excreta building up in the corners, on the support surfaces, and in between the mesh and wood support on the sides. While the remainder of the enclosure is adequately cleaned additional attention should be given to ensure the corners and areas where the mesh wire is attached to the wood are cleaned as well. Excessive build up of excreta increases the risk of hazards such as bacterial growth, fungus, parasites and insects which may cause illness. The enclosures shall be properly cleaned and sanitized to protect the rabbits from illness. Correct by March 21, 2016.

3.125(a)

FACILITIES, GENERAL.

The farm fence used to create the pig enclosure holding the male pig "Tubby", and the enclosure holding the sow and two small potbelly pigs have sections that are not secured. These sections hve been pushed up creating gaps that allow the smaller pigs to freely enter and exit the enclosure. These gaps may also allow unwanted animals to enter the enclosure. Some of the fence wire has been broken leaving sharp points that may cause injury. The fence shall be secured and all sharp points removed to protect the animals from injury and contain them safely within their enclosure. Correct by March 28, 2016.

The exit briefing conducted with a facility representative.
