The enclosure for the peacocks had an area where the nylon mesh was tangled and shredded. This could cause injury to the birds if they were to become caught in the material. Facilities must be kept in good repair to contain the animals and protect them from injury. The facility must correct this issue.

Space requirements.

Four fox are being housed in an octagon shaped metal wire enclosure with a concrete floor. Multiple enrichment items were observed in the enclosure, such as a hanging nylon hammock, however many items are not conducive for fox typical behavior. In addition, this type of enclosure flooring does not provide for the species housed within to exhibit normal digging behavior and normal postural adjustments. This can affect the welfare and well being of the animals and ultimately have a negative effect on animal health. The facility must provide a more appropriate enclosure for fox species.
