2.40(b)(2) CRITICAL

ATTENDING VETERINARIAN AND ADEQUATE VETERINARY CARE (DEALERS AND EXHIBITORS).

A lemur became ill and started to convulse at approx 6:00 PM 4 days after being vaccinated by the attending veterinarian. The licensee immediately called the veterinarian by telephone. The veterinarian was not available to come to the facility but referred her to another veterinarian who was on call at the practice. That veterinarian informed the licensee that she was not sure what she would do if she came out (she may have not had experience with primates).

The licensee was in frequent contact by telephone with the veterinarians trying to get someone to come out to examine the lemur. The lemur eventually stopped convulsing and the licensee then told the veterinarian during one of the calls not to come because she thought the lemur was recovering. The lemur died the next morning.

The licensee's program of veterinary care indicates that the emergency care will be handled by the attending veterinarian's hospital. In this case, the hospital's veterinarian was not able to either immediately come out to treat this primate, or would not know what to do, as soon as symptoms developed which may have provided life saving treatment.

A program of emergency care shall be developed and formalized to ensure that emergency care can be quickly given to any species of animal that you have at any hour by a veterinarian who has knowledge of the species in question. This may be accomplished (but not limited to) having your veterinarian's assurances that he will provide emergency services by himself or another veterinarian in the practice, or recommending another hospital (or emergency clinic) who can provide the required emergency services.
