2.33(b)(2)

ATTENDING VETERINARIAN AND ADEQUATE VETERINARY CARE.

There was one white rabbit observed to be keeping both eyes partially closed and shedding an excessive amount of hair as compared to the other rabbits. The rabbit appeared slightly dull when attempts were made to interact with it during inspection. There is no apparent discharge around the eyes and the rabbit has been eating and drinking normally according to the owner.

This condition was noticed by the owner when the rabbit arrived at the facility, about a week ago. Although the owner wishes to remove this rabbit from the colony due to its potential ill health, he is not certain when this will occur. Veterinary care has not been sought for this rabbit.

Abnormal behavior, including dullness, squinting, and excessive shedding in rabbits can be a sign of underlying illness. Left untreated, illness can progress and potentially cause significant discomfort to the animal.

Appropriate methods must be used to prevent, control, diagnose, and treat diseases and injuries. This includes consultation of a veterinarian whenever abnormal conditions and behaviors are observed in rabbits.
