3.125(a)

Facilities, general.

One chinchilla had a chewed up plastic flooring shelf in its enclosure. Two other chinchillas had rust on their grated flooring. Four ferrets had a rusted feeder. An enclosure containing the pigs had an enclosure/storage shed area that had been damaged by a fallen tree. A perforated aluminum sheet was sticking out with potentially sharp edges. In addition, at least two screws were observed to be sticking out on this enclosure/storage shed. The white nose coati had a small plastic children's play set for it to climb onto. The plastic flooring for this was cracked.

Chewed up or cracked flooring and sharp edges or screws sticking out can cause injury to the animals within that enclosure. Rusted surfaces or feeders don't allow for those surfaces to be properly sanitized.

All surfaces in these enclosures must be fixed or replaced so their are no sharp edges or points sticking out. Rusted surfaces should be replaced so those surfaces can be adequately sanitized.

3.127(b)

Facilities, outdoor.

Two goats were housed in an enclosure that did not provide adequate shelter. The shelter they were given had a roof, but there were no sides. The past few days have been windy and rainy. Not having a shelter with adequate protection from the wind and rain doesn't afford the goats protection from the elements of the weather. The licensee must provide the goats a shelter that adequately protects them from the elements of the weather.

3.131(c)

Sanitation.

Clutter was observed in the enclosure containing the pigs. I observed cans laying around, carriers were stored in the enclosure, various wooden structures and wood boards were laying around throughout the enclosure. Clutter can potentially cause injury to the animals within the enclosure. All clutter should be removed from the enclosure.
